

C. StrategyBuilder

C1. Discuss with a friend

1. When using cite from the internet, you must give information about your source(s).
2. Reusing old papers and submitting them as new is self-plagiarism.
3. The original author's right over a unique idea is intellectual property.
4. Software programmes help teachers identify privacy for plagiarism.

E. Challenge

E1. KnowledgeMap

Q1 – C ; Q2 – B ; Q3 - A ; Q4 – A ; Q5 - C

F. Project

F1. Synthesis

The author didn't mention who he cited at the bottom. Also he should give the source of the information.

Bill Gates says that there are three million sold computers every year in China and the people don't pay for the software. He believes that they will pay for it in the future. As long as they are using his software and get addicted, he will figure out how to make benefits from it in the next decade.

~Bill Gates - CNETNews, 2 July 1998

F2. Analysis

Q1 We didn't have any difficulties in paraphrasing.

Q2 I think it will be the same as quoting and not paraphrasing. It's pointless.

Q3 Yes, you should. Otherwise it's considered plagiarism.

H. FastLane

H1. On the ground

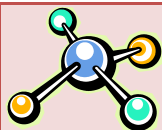

Nowadays Business Informatics with English is quite popular and gives you large opportunities after graduating, but it's very hard because it combines three of the most challenging courses. The English language is one of the main components in the business world, along with the organizational skills and computer science.

BIE is very popular in Central Europe, but every prestige university in almost every country is offering this discipline.

After graduating BIE you can work in almost every position that requires business and IT skills.

To summarize: when you graduate BIE, you already have the required skills to get the high paid jobs in large number of the big companies.

~ I.K.

J. Insider

1 - according to 2 - but 3 - in her opinion

4 - in order to 5 - provide 6 - also

7 - emphasize 8 - continues with 9 - according to

10 - In the last 11 - argue 12 - In conclusion 13 - summarize

14 - because

M. OverDrive

2.

When you're making a beautiful chest of drawers, you're working on it as a whole. You don't leave away the unnoticeable part, just cause you don't see or use it. You know you got a beautiful, quality piece of work in your room at night.

Change is difficult to be accepted. People stick to whatever they're used to, thinking it's all they need, instead of looking forward making their life easier. But with time, people will see the good. IT and medicine alone will change the world completely 20 years from what it is today.

Our goal is to connect the world. We are making this possible by giving the options to the people to share whatever they want and connect with whoever they want wherever they are.

O: Practice Makes Perfect

Paraphrasing is using your own words to express someone else's ideas without changing the idea of the original source.

Citing is giving a reference to the source of the information in your work.

Quoting is taking the exact words from an original source and citing it after.

Copyright © 2014 Denitza Charkova & Ivan Shotlekov

Plagiarism is taking someone else's original ideas and presenting it as yours.